Real-money online poker is another thing you can take out from your to-do list as a gambler. It's currently not on the list of legal gaming activities. However, online sports betting is now in the clear, awaiting final preparations. Another good news for sports fans in New York is the availability of daily fantasy sports sites.

Pre-2013, casino gambling in New York was illegal. It was only after the sweeping change in 2013 that commercial NY casinos started opening up on the territory of the state. There was no adequate formulation yet that could be called 'New York online gambling laws' back then, so Internet gambling was non-existent.

It's interesting to point out that the lottery was legalized in 1967, and in 2010, New York became part of the US Powerball fever. The laws on racinos and sports betting have also gone through transformations before they would finally allow for the healthy industry we know today.

The wire act of 1961 brought broad reformation to the US sports betting sector. It forbade the use of wire communications for the purpose of placing sports wagers. No one really knew the extent of this ban, so it went down in the history of NY online gambling laws as a controversial act.

Two thousand eleven marked one of the biggest clampdowns in US gambling history and inevitably affected the future of New York online casinos. The founders of the biggest online poker sites at the time, PokerStars, Full Tilt Poker, and Cereus, were brought to justice on several allegations. Events like this bring us round to the opinion that online gambling New York laws that protect the users could and must be established sooner rather than later.

Blackjack is the US's favorite game of chance involving skills, or should we say 'analytical thinking'. By extension of the ban on New York online casinos – we regret to inform you – gamblers cannot play online blackjack in New York. At least not until licensed blackjack sites start to appear on the Internet.

As you already know, the state legislators are dismissive of the need to legalize online casinos in New York. Because of that, online roulette fans have to accept the fact they won't be able to play their favorite game of chance on the Internet. The option to play roulette in a physical casino remains open, though.

No mainstream casino site can go without online slots – the most user-friendly gambling game. Since there are no New York online casinos, so you cannot play online slots in New York. We can only guess which game titles would be favored. What we can do is extrapolate the results gleaned from other states where online gambling is legal.

After the fiasco of 2011's Black Friday, online poker operators think twice before setting up shop anywhere in the United States. Besides, the current law ruled out online poker in NY. We'd say the diversity in online gambling NY suffers a great deal from that, but it's something that must be accepted.

Land-based is the obvious choice for players from New York. For one – they are the only legal option. If you choose to go online to place wagers, you would be overstepping the law. Now, when convenience is taken into account, we can't say that land-based can fill in all the gaps.

There is a comfort to be found in playing online that, for the moment, New York gambling cannot afford to punters who live there. On the other hand, going to a physical casino has its upsides as well. You might be able to arrive just in time to take advantage of an ongoing promotion or other perks.

Right now, the topmost on the agenda is strengthening and tightening up the measures taken to make the domain of online sports betting safe for bettors to explore. There's licensing going on as we speak, and there's still a lot of regulation and approving left to be done by the NYS Gaming Commission.

New York's minimum gambling age varies based on the gambling option chosen. 18-year-olds can participate in pari-mutuel wagering, the lottery, charitable gambling, and play at racinos, and some casinos. We look for games powered by RTG, Rival, and Betsoft. You can play routette, blackjack, baccarat, craps, video slots, and casino poker at our approved New York casinos online. Most of them also offer live dealer games. Bonuses & Promotions — You've probably already seen some of the welcome bonuses listed on the table above. There are first. It goes without saying but offshore sportsbooks of course offer odds on all games played in New York and if you are looking to bet on the New York Giants or the Islanders or the Knicks, offshore sports books will have you covered and will often offer a wider variety of betting options than even the casinos in Vegas can.

The online market is very competitive, so the games offered usually have a lower house edge than land-based casinos. That makes sense because the casinos have lower overhead costs than in a land-based casino.

And, to keep a happy customer base, online casinos really have to offer good value because a competing brand is only a click away.

These factors create a market that offers better odds, higher payouts, and better promotions for players. In the NJ regulated market, players are also protected by the most well-respected gaming authority in the country (the NJ DGE). All together, this creates a strong value proposition for players.

Who am I? I am a professional gambler who has played, studied, and written about casino gambling for many years. I have appeared on CBS, the Travel Channel, and GSN while competing in blackjack tournaments. Mathematical analysis of casino games is another area of my expertise, which I have used for both game designers and other professional gamblers. For all the details, see my bio.

No and New York lawmakers are currently not considering legislation to legalize online casinos. There is no compelling evidence that online casinos will be coming to New York in the near future.

The New York State constitution explicitly forbids games of chance like casino games, with some exceptions. It would take a constitutional amendment or successful referendum to approve regulated online casinos in the state, and such a measure has not been proposed yet.

New York did include a referendum measure on the 2013 election ballot to allow for up to seven land-based commercial casinos to be built in the state. The referendum was approved by voters. The new casinos are New York's first commercial casinos, whereas Native American casinos have been serving the Empire State's players since 1993 when the first Indian Casino opened.

There have been several legislative attempts in recent years to legalize online poker and sports betting in New York. Finally, sports betting was legalized in NY in 2019 and launched its first sportsbook at Rivers Casino in July 2019.

Unfortunately, poker is still sitting on the bench. Some bills have classified online poker games as games of skill, which are legal according to the state constitution, instead of games of chance, which are prohibited.

None of the proposed bills have been passed yet, but they remain active for the 2019 legislative session.

The options for state-regulated online betting in New York State are relatively limited compared to New York's neighboring states of New Jersey — the market leader for legal online casinos in the U.S. — and Pennsylvania, where online casinos are slated to launch in mid-2019. Currently, players in New York can place wagers online for horse races and play fantasy sports.

Online wagering on horse races is legal thanks to a safe harbor clause for horse racing, including off-track betting activities and associated online wagering, in the federal UIGEA legislation, which otherwise limits online gambling in the U.S. All of the OTB branches in New York offer online horse race wagering options.

New York State began regulating online fantasy sports activity in 2016 as a game of skill, which is legal in New York. In 2018, a court ruling against New York's classification of DFS as a game of skill muddied the waters, but the case was appealed, and gameplay continues for now.
