One job within the poker industry that sounds awesome is that of a proposition player. As some people know, prop players earn an hourly wage from casinos to sit down and start games. In theory, this sounds great because you can collect an hourly wage on top of winnings. The only catch is that these grinders must use their own cash to play with – an aspect which makes being a prop player hard when rake and dealer tips are accounted for.

These offers are not available to new players who sign up on the site, so most amateurs do not even know they exist. Since the point of these extremely lucrative deals is to create action at table games, prop comps routinely come with stipulations about the games you can play. For example, you usually can't join a table unless there are fewer than five players at it. Many prop players are not allowed to play heads-up, which is typically considered a predatory game.

By regulation, California card rooms do not offer house-banked games. Instead, they facilitate card games in which players play against each other. Card room players have the opportunity to take a rotating bank and wager as the Player/Dealer. Unlike Las Vegas and Tribal Casinos, the casino itself is never involved in the action.

In the end, prop players provide any important service to a poker room. They help to build rooms and get the gameplay going, but then leave the tables once they get busy enough to succeed on their own. There is nothing worse than joining a poker room and seeing your table dwindle away or even not being able to get a seat at one of the good tables.

One thing that the Gazette article stressed is that a prop player is not the same as a shill, who's a player that uses casino funds. If shills lose money, it's just the house absorbing the losses; if they win, the money goes to the house. Colorado's government banned the use of shills in 1996, which has only given rise to more prop players.

However, the Gazette article stressed that props are not always skilled professionals who reap tons of profits. A Colorado prop player named Tyler made this point clear when he said, “My role is to help increase the rake. We're not ringers.” He added, “Everyone has an equal chance when they sit down – and they didn't walk in to do charity work. They're there to beat me.”

My brother asked me how to become a poker prop player, which is a person hired by a casino to start games and keep games going. I asked my husband, Robert Turner, who has managed props at several casinos, what it takes to become a prop player for poker.

They are compensated for the additional requirements placed on prop players – they may be forced to get up and leave a good game if the table fills.
