I understand that they only come on overnight as they are connected to a different circuit but do they stay on full the full 7 hours of economy 7 or do they turn off when they are fully charged. I am trying to estimate how much it is going to cost me to use them. Does anyone else have Dimplex storage heaters and knows for example how many hours are needed to reach full charge, medium or low charge. Any help is greatly appreciated. If the last two are the case, does anyone know roughly how many kwh i am looking at. Hope that all makes sense. There is a thermostat inside the heater which shuts off when the bricks reach a certain temperature and will maintain that temp during the off peak time. As for the cost I dont know that one. Obviously if set to lower input it will use less than 23.8kWh. Obviously if set to lower input it will use less than 23.8kWh. A heater will not expel all its heater during the day. If set at maximum, the thermostat will cut off when the heat reached is that set by the manufacturer for that particular heater. Once heated from cold, it will not consume electricity for anywhere near 7 hours. This is confirmed by hearing the thermostat clicking on and off.

A heater will not expel all its heater during the day. I dont think they have ever been on maximum. The boost is on automatic, so retains heat better than our previous manual ones. I keep a careful check on our electricity consumption and figures show a summer overnight consumption immersion heater, washing machine, dishwasher, etc but obviously no storage heater use of 10 units. Looking back at my records the highest winter overnight consumption has been 67 units, so storage heater use has been around 57 units in the coldest weather. This would mean that storage heaters totalling 15.35 kw use 57 units ie around 4 units per kw of heater per night. To get your own figures you would just have to take a reading each day. would you say that the input on your storage heaters is always above or below the half way point. Does any one else out there have any figures that they are willing to contribute. So on a setting below maximum you use just over 50% of the theoretical maximum. Position of storage heater doesn't help either, it is at opposite end of sitting room from seating area. I've taken readings while using the electric fire, and it seems to have a very good thermostat, so power consumption is not too bad on the 1kw setting it seems to use around 2kw for 3 hours in winter. Call us and we can organise next day priority delivery Designed to replace conventional storage heaters these heaters have had their energy efficiency boosted with new and upgraded advanced intelligent controls featuring include Adaptive Start and Open Window Sensing technology. The Dimplex XLE is the ultimate upgrade with clean looks and reliable performance and five different power outputs to choose from 500W to 1500W. All storage heaters require an economy 7 meter to benefit from the low cost, offpeak energy. Please see the Elnur Digital Smart Storage Heaters which can be installed on a single electricity supply if there is an unrestricted economy 7 tariff meter present. The peak supply is connected via a switched fused spur with a fuse rating suitable for the appliances flex.

The offpeak supply provided via a 20A double pole switch. The controller can also be locked by a PIN code, ideal for landlords or to prevent children from tampering. The controller system now has a convenient coin cell battery back up that saves reprogramming after power outages. The heat output is selfregulated to match the users lifestyle. No more guessing how long it will take to heat a room, For example, if you program the heater to 21 degrees at 7 am the heater ensures the room is heated using the minimum amount of energy to 21 degrees at 7 am exactly. Low energy and low carbon, great for the user and for the environment. VAT no 230 2433 19 By continuing to browse the site you are agreeing to our use of cookies.
