INTRODUCTION One of the cornerstones of Marine Corps customs, courtesies and traditions is our execution of close order drill and ceremonies. These traditions are perpetuated from one generation to the next through constant use and practice. The "esprit de corps" of every Marine has been brought about by their everpresent feeling of pride, not only in their unit, but also in themselves. The preservation of traditional discipline, our customs and courtesies, and the heritage of our Corps is our duty. It is our further duty to see that the same high standard of discipline and esprit de corps is not only preserved, but also further strengthened. These intangibles must be passed on to the future Marines who will take their place among the ranks our Corps. The object of close order drill is to teach Marines by exercise to obey orders and to do so immediately in the correct way. Close order drill is one foundation of discipline and esprit de corps. Additionally, it is still one of the finest methods for developing confidence and troop leading abilities in our subordinate leaders.

Ceremonial duties are written deep into our history as a Corps. <http://szdaza.com/pic/cr50ing-manual.xml>

It is no coincidence that among the units famous for ceremonial prowess and spitandpolish are also to be found some of the worlds most redoubtable fighting formations. The hallmark of the world's fighting organizations, the Roman legions, the Spartans, the Foreign Legion, the British Brigade of Guards and many others is that they are as good on parade as they are in the field or in the attack. While we no longer use drill and formations to align the ranks as was done for the phalanxes of Rome or the squares of Waterloo, drill and ceremony is still the foundation of instilling and developing discipline in any size unit and the individual. The Marine Corps has long enjoyed a worldwide reputation for sharp appearance and soldierly performance of duties. Our reputation as a Corps is built upon the legacy of those that came before us and puts us on par with the finest military organizations in the world's history. This reputation has been enhanced by continually demonstrating that our execution of peacetime functions is excelled only by our performance in battle. The special distinction that the Marine Corps has today in regards to drill and ceremonies is best exemplified by the saying "First on foot, and right on the line." This privilege bestowed on the Corps by the Secretary of the Navy on 9 August 1876, gives Marines the place of honor in any Naval formation. The District also provides equal access to its facilities to the Boys Scouts and other patriotic youth groups, as required by the Boys Scout of America Equal Access Act. This is often, but not always, followed by an implicit Relax Rest. This is the only position that actually offers soldiers freedom of movement. Soldiers are typically allowed to move other than moving their feet, though, when it is given by a highranking officer, soldiers typically move a minimal amount after a bit of stretching. At the same time, all members of the formation snap their heads so they are facing right. After this, they pause, and then shuffle back to a new position, where their hand is extremely close to the soldiers shoulder on their right, unless otherwise specified. The American version of this is called Dress Right, DRESS. At the same time, all members of the formation snap their heads so they are facing left. The American version of this is called Dress Left, DRESS. This is used so that dressing is off the colours. The formations to the left of the Colour Party will dress to the right and the formations to the right of the Colour Party will dress to the left. All personnel to the right of the Colours in front row and left column except the left marker take one step forward, pause, and only the front rank bring up their left arms parallel to the ground. All personnel to the left of the colours in front row and right side column except the right marker take one step forward, pause, and only the front rank bring up their right arms parallel to the ground. At the same time, all members of the formation snap their heads so they are facing right. Soldiers without weapons use a salute appropriate for their headdress. The soldiers will loosen the sling so they can now have their rifles strapped around their shoulders. Soldiers will load the rifle with the blank round in preparation of the Feu de joie, French for Fire of Joy in parades.

This is called in Polish as the Salwa Honorowa or Honor Volley. In times, the accompanying bugle call for it is used before the order is done. The troops pull out their bayonets from their uniforms and attach them to the weapon. When this command is said the parade prepares in readiness for the march past. Two, three, up. Two, three, down. The arms will be lowered back to their normal position on the commands Order ARMS. They can also salute if given the command Hand SALUTE. The parade leader salutes while looking in the direction they gave. They are lowered in the same amount of time elapsed between the two words. On this very command the unit being reviewed advances 15 paces and halts automatically before presenting arms to the reviewing officer. This is a simple, ceremonial letting fly and catching of the colours. This slants the colours forward sufficiently to negate this, and they are brought back up afterward. It is caught and guided into its frog with the left hand, which is then returned to its side. The cautionary and executive are both called on the left foot. The left leg is then brought up to be parallel to the ground although exceptions are made for kilted regiments and slammed into the ground in the position of attention. This motion is done at a particular fixed point. The right leg is then brought up to be parallel to the ground and slammed down into attention. United States units do not make exaggerated gestures with the legs or arms. Members shall bend the left knee, straighten it in double time and smartly place the left foot beside the right to assume the position of attention. In the Royal Navy heel movements are the same for Right Face. The way the march is performed depends on the regiments nationality. The standard pace is 65 beats per minute. It creates a travel speed of approximately double that of Quick Time, designed to be used even when carrying heavy burdens. It can not be given from the halt. The soldier will draw a cartridge.

Cartridges consist of a spherical lead bullet wrapped in a paper cartridge which also holds the gunpowder propellant. The bullet is separated from the powder charge by a twist in the paper. The soldier should pour a small pinch of the powder from the cartridge into the priming pan. He should then close the frizzen so that the priming powder is trapped. The butt of the musket is then dropped to the ground by the left foot with the trigger guard facing to the rear and the soldier having just poured the rest of the powder into the barrel. Once all of the powder is poured into the barrel, the soldier should have stuffed the paper and the ball into the barrel, the paper acts as wadding to keep the gunpowder in the barrel and also packing it down. The soldier should draw his ramrod from below the barrel. First forcing it half out before seizing it backhanded in the middle, followed by drawing it entirely out, while simultaneously turning it to the front and placing it one inch into the barrel. He should then use the ramrod to firmly ram the bullet, wadding, and powder down to the bottom followed by tamping it down with two quick strokes. The ramrod is then returned to its hoops under the barrel. Then the musket is returned to the shoulder arms position. The musket is brought to the recover position held vertically in front of the body with the trigger guard facing forward and the cock hammer is drawn back to the fullcock position. Because of the size of the companies and the general noise of battle, these commands could be and were often communicated through specialized drum beatings. The main advantage of the British Redcoat was that he trained at this procedure almost every day. The standard for the British Army was the ability to load and fire three rounds per minute. A skilled unit of musketeers was often able to fire four rounds per minute. The movements sideways or at angles, the pirouettes, etc.

, were the movements needed for massed cavalymen to form and reform and deploy. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police Musical Ride gives an inkling of what massed cavalry drill at speed would have looked like. Princesses wave from floats covered in paper mache my daughters love this. Soldiers march in perfect step following the commands of their leader. Today I'll look at how a leader control Soldiers with such precision and ease. Four lessons of Drill and Ceremony are instilled in each new soldier as they enter Basic Training, and can be used to lead your family and improve your relationships. It is an internal discipline. Teach your kids the routines and steps required to get in bed when you say "it's bedtime." Help them to know that they need to put on pajamas, brush their teeth, and use the toilet. Be there guiding them through their routine until it becomes habit. Kids learn by watching and doing. This precision allows Soldiers to not only look sharp, it is a demonstration of the discipline stated above. When they spill the milk all over the floor, don't let them off the hook by cleaning up after them. Work with them until every drop of milk is cleaned. You don't have to yell commands to ensure that a job is done right. They will be able to listen to instructions and take action when the time is right. When people complete tasks in groups, they have a sense of accomplishment that is greater than any one person. Plant a garden. Clean the garage and donate to charity.

Reorganize and decorate a room. Any activity that uses precision, planning, and group action to achieve a common goal is ripe with opportunity to build morale and bind people together. Time you will cherish as your kids get older. To be a quality leader, you've got to understand your followers. Soldiers first function as part of a group. Once promoted, they demonstrate their learning as they lead new Soldiers under their command. I want nothing more than to see my children being amazing parents full of discipline and love. Its just overly redundant. Obviously on the command of fall out, you fall out. Unless they changed something in the TC, there is no prepatory command for fall out, you just saying and walk away.FALL OUT is a combined command, making it the command of execution.
