Do you have these misconceptions I was sceptical at first about submitting claims for such issues but MSIG actually took time to help me with it. I shall be renewing my annual travel insurance. Years ago, my claims for misconnected flight and delay were also attended to. Thank you to the officer, Ms Angie. Extremely efficient and helpful customer service. I trust MSIG with my long haul flights. It took less than 24 hours to process my request. I am very appreciative, thank you. It is because of the outstanding service and plans that MSIG provides that I have been strongly recommending it to people around me. Incredible and thoroughly professional job, guys. Keep up the good work! Your staff, Jingyi, is sincere and lends a human touch. No wonder MSIG won the Insurer Claims Award! I am truly impressed. My case was handled by Valerie Koo and her service is top notched. The claims team was communicative and responsive. I will continue to be on their annual plan.

Stephen P Daugherty 1.0 out of 5 stars Luckily it was only 5 bucks. so I'm not too bummed out. I was under the impression that if you removed the jumper, the external power would power the motors and the motor shield, and another power source would power the arduino. but there seems to be some sort of power draw issue with the one that I got. The stepper drivers get blazing hot. I turned them off after just a few minutes after smelling burning plastic. I was using these on a nema 17 stepper, which I think is appropriate for this driver. I'd say these are only appropriate for the very tiniest steppers. The nema 17 motors used on a 3d printer are too powerful for this thing. I wish they would have thrown on some female pin headers for Analog 05, but I went ahead and did that myself. One warning. This will NOT work well with little hobby motors requiring only 3volts. I have it working for now but only by overpowering the motors which will shorten their life significantly. Actually come to think of it I have at least 1 motor which no longer works and I did have it hooked up to this board.

But I have some 6 volt motors which will be suitable replacements and will work better on this shield. For reference I'm using it with an Arduino Uno R3. That being said here are the pros and cons pros more powerful than a lot of other shields. It can take a good bit of current or voltage includes a power led and a reset button just like the arduino the screw terminals provide a very solid connection cons in my experience, the shield is very temperamental when you connect it to the arduino, a lot of times I have to push it down to get it to really register This is not a stackable shield and unfortunately that makes getting to the unused pins pretty difficult You need to use a very specific library of commands to get it to run and the library seems a little bit cumbersome. It seems that the capacitor connected to the external power circuit is not rated to 24V as it is supposed to be, since the Hbridge is good up to 36V. I just blew it up with a 20V power supply not connected backwards. Otherwise a good, if obsolete, shield. It can also drive stepper motors and servos. However, you can not stack other shields on top of it as it does not duplicate the arduino pins. It will work okay if this is the only shield you are going to use or if you can stack it at the very top. The problem may be the space left between the shield being tight. One of which blew completely off the board when given more than 16 volts. I would not recommend this product unless you plan on using it for very small motors as it cannot handle the load the description indicates. All DOCUMENTATION on how to set up and use this shield can be found here this board is really just a clone of the adafruit v1 motor shield. So use that key word if you're looking for more info. Item quality exceeded my expectations. One thing to note for future buyers, this controller is based on the adafruit v1.0 model. Which means the most recent Arduino libraries will not work, need the libraries exclusive to v1.0.

Patent Pending Patent Number 1911445.3. The Macs always had an internal drive, and any external drive cannot be daisy chained. It features an eject button and a port for daisy chaining additional drives on the Apple II. Exterior condition varies from as Nice as it gets to Severely discolored or a cracked housing and everything in between. More information about coloring can be found here. I try to put drives in the most appropriate category as far as exterior condition, but as the photos show, it is very hard to judge with some. Engraving will be disregarded in favor of coloring unless it is large and prominent. If you are buying a drive along with a computer purchase, I will do my best to match the coloring. Most of the covers are a little yellowed with age, storage conditions, or both. Available with or without 3.5 Drive purchase. As the Macintosh isn't capable of chaining external drives, the owners most likely never noticed or removed it. Later SEs used the 1.4mb SuperDrive. All have been cleaned and greased. Tested to format, read and write. You can see some components changed in the last photo black label on the left and red on the right. Cleaned inside and out, regreased and work perfectly. While I can't promise you won't find something cosmetically wrong like a scuff or scratch the one in the photo has one small pry mark on either side of the case on the left side towards the front, these look Nice! It will work with the 512Ke, Plus and SE non FDHD. Apple advised not to use this drive on a system with a 1.4mb internal drive. This drive came out in 1985, as it was clear already that 400k was not enough storage. As a Macintosh drive, there is no eject button nor daisy chaining port making it unsuitable for the Apple II. It has all its feet. Cleaned and regreased. Looks Nice! The last photo shows two LC IIIs, the top is auto inject and the bottom is manual inject note the location of the eject hole as well.

All are made by Sony, 2MB, Model MPF75W01G 02G, 12G, etc, but all start with MPF75W on the blue label. Note that these do not display any Apple identification on the drive. They read, write and eject. The last photo shows two LC IIIs, the top is auto inject and the bottom is manual inject note the location of the eject hole as well. Drive may be a Sony 2MB, Model MPF 42A pictured, MPF 52A, or Mitsubishi MF355F. You may receive any, note that these likely do not display any Apple identification on the drive. Drives have been cleaned, lubed, and tested to format, write, read and eject. Manufactured by NEC, Model UF0001, 1345078811010 Internal floppy disk drive cable. It should work with any Mac with a floppy port. Looks and works great! The first USB floppy drive solution PLUS 120 MB hard drive on a disk. Drivers needed for Mac OS 8.1, but built into OS 8.5 and higher. All come with a matching interface USB cable and power adapter no original boxes for them. The Installation Guide and Drivers came on a CD. I don't have enough CDs for them all so you may not get an original. USB interface. Usable on any computer with USB Internal Disk Drive cable for the Mac 128K, 512K, 512Ke and Plus. Internal floppy disk drive cable. USB interface. Model FDUSBTM2. Comes with CD and instructions. Usable on any computer with USB. Model FDUSBM Drive has been tested to read and write on OS 10.4 and truly looks like a brand new drive.
