MUSKEGON COUNTY, MI – Gov. Gretchen Whitmer wants to delay a decision on a Muskegon County casino until a federal decision is made on whether to recognize a different tribe that may want to open its own casino.

Because it would be an off-reservation casino, it requires federal and state approval.

The Department of Interior gave its approval of the casino in December 2020, just prior to former President Donald Trump leaving office. That gave Whitmer a year to make her decision, but she later was able to get federal approval for a six-month extension.

Yang’s camp said that the mayoral hopeful was throwing out an idea, rather than a fully baked proposal.

NEW YORK — Mayoral candidate Andrew Yang has proposed a casino on Governors Island as a way to raise revenue for New York City’s recovery — a plan that would face immense obstacles if he were to pursue it as the city’s next leader.

For decades, tribal leaders held out hope that a casino eventually would be developed on the “Harbor 31” site on Muskegon Lake. In 2014, city officials began to back off their endorsement of the plan, and ground recently was broken on a $110 million mixed-use development of the Harbor 31 property.

“The current plans for Governors Island are focused on developing a mixed-use campus that will provide educational, commercial and hospitality offerings centered on the theme of climate change and sustainability,” said Alicia Glen, chair of the trust’s board and former deputy mayor. “In addition to the fact that it is prohibited by the deed, there is no scenario under which a casino would fit into the current or future plans for Governors Island.”

There would be a few issues with such a proposal: For one, casinos are banned on the island through a 2003 deed restriction that was hashed out with the federal government. In addition, the unused portions of the island are unlikely to remain that way for long.

In a terse letter sent Monday, May, 23, Whitmer pressured U.S. Interior Secretary Deb Haaland to decide on the tribe’s recognition before June 1 “so that I can take it into account” in determining the fate of the casino. Alternatively, she said her deadline should be extended.

“I am deeply concerned and disappointed that another tribe is attempting to pressure the governor to give away some of our homelands in order to build an off-reservation casino on the treaty lands of our tribe,” Grand River Bands of Ottawa Indians Chairman Ron Yob said in a prepared statement. “This is morally wrong and unjust, and we call on Governor Whitmer to reject this cynical effort.”

Yob praised Haaland for pushing the tribe's petition for recognition “back on active consideration.” He also expressed “the greatest respect” for Whitmer.

While broad local support buoyed the Little River Band's planned casino for the past 12 years, it has received pushback from other Michigan casinos that oppose off-reservation gaming.

The Little River Band's plans for an off-site casino at the site of the former Great Lakes Downs horse racing facility has been in the works for more than 12 years. It is proposing a $180 million development, including a 149,000 square-foot casino and 220-room hotel on the 60 acres in Fruitport Township.

A decision on whether to federally recognize the Grand River Bands of Ottawa Indians is due by Oct. 12. If it does receive federal recognition, the tribe could open its own casino, according to Whitmer.

Whitmer wrote to Haaland, the Grand River Bands “may wish to open their own gaming facility” not far from the Little River Band's proposed casino site. She could “frustrate” those plans if she were to approve the Little River Band's casino, Whitmer wrote.

“It is shameful that another tribe would seek to alienate our people from the lands of their ancestors,” Yob said. “I am hopeful that Governor Whitmer will preserve and protect the lands of the Grand River Bands for generations to come.”

“Shameful” is how the Grand River Bands of Ottawa Indians termed the Little River Band of Ottawa Indians' plan to open a casino on property the Grand River Bands says is in its ancestral homeland.

The Grand River Bands of Ottawa Indians first sought federal recognition in 1994, and has been on the “active consideration list” since 2013, according to Yob. The recognition was needed to solidify its plans to open a casino near downtown Muskegon several miles west of the Fruitport

In her letter to Haaland, a President Joe Biden appointee, Whitmer complained that the deadline "forced" by the Trump administration was "unworkable" because of the pending issue of the Grand River Bands' recognition.

"Andrew believes in constantly discussing new and creative ideas to help rebuild our city — but he also believes that any major development project must be community led," Yang spokesperson Chris Coffey said in a statement. "That's why this idea, like many others, would not advance unless stakeholders believed in the process, which is far from even beginning."

The governor wrote "it is critical that we have this information available to enable us to weigh the various considerations and accurately assess the impact and consequences of this decision."

Update: This story has been updated with comments from the leader of the Little River Band of Ottawa Indians.

She wrote that if a decision on tribal recognition isn't made by June 1, her June 16 deadline should be extended until there is a decision.
