In 1999, the country's Supreme Court issued a formal decree saying that gambling regulation would be down to its 23 provinces, plus capital city Buenos Aires. While the differences between regions are too complex for us to go into in this article, we can speak in a general sense and say that land-based venues must be officially authorized to run betting activities. Local authorities are responsible for granting authorization and ensuring that gambling establishments follow hygiene standards and pay the relevant taxes.
