Germany has a complicated legal history of gambling, but in summary, land casinos and certain forms of online gambling are legal, including sports betting and casino games. Germany is a country with a rich history and has a vast history of gambling as well. Gambling in Germany has been present for as long as money has been in circulation, dating back as far as the Middle Ages.

However, unlike in many other countries, gambling never took to the mainstream and was often frowned upon by German society. The number of gamblers has always been minimal in comparison to other countries because it was illegal at times as well. This is because gambling was always viewed as a morally questionable activity.

Following the end of World War 2, German infrastructure was shattered, and many new laws came into effect, one of which let states decide their own gambling legislation, while gambling itself remained illegal on a federal level.

This paved the way for the opening of sports betting shops and casinos, but gambling only took off near the beginning of the 21st century, with the advent of online betting.

Online casinos were considered illegal at the time, but this did not stop German citizens from betting in off-shore online casinos. The state of Schleswig-Holstein was the only state which legalized online gambling and started issuing its own license. The country had issued over 50 online casino licenses for Germans to play at, but they all expired in 2018.

Euro casino online

The state of Schleswig-Holstein then decided to abandon its own gambling legislation and joined the other German states in abiding the IGT (Interstate Gambling Treaty). This treaty took effect in 2008 and put a ban on all forms of online betting.

The IGT was amended in 2012 to allow online sports betting and lottery, but casinos and poker were left untouched.

Legal casinos, which are state-run, but still owned by private contractors, are available in Germany. In fact, there are more than 50 land casinos in the country. However, their popularity is low and diminishing as time goes on.

This is because these establishments are not like the Vegas-style casinos. They sometimes require an entry fee, have a smoking ban, are not open 24/7, and are rarely conjoined with hotels, shopping malls, or restaurants. This makes them unattractive to visit for most gambling enthusiasts in the country, and their profits are dwindling by the year.

Online euro casino

On the other hand, online gambling has been witnessing an exponential rise in popularity, despite its technically illegal status. German bettors take their cash to off-shore online casinos, an activity that does not put them liable for criminal prosecution.

As Germany is a fairly progressive country, we expect a more updated online gambling legislation in the near future that would pave the way for German-based online casinos. Given online gambling's popularity, the country would gain massive tax revenue and lose basically nothing in the process.

One gambling trend that is on the rise internationally, as well as in Germany, is mobile casinos. Mobile casino german are some of the top-visited casinos in the country today. Make sure to check out the safest casinos mobile in Germany.
