Martingale casino system online

The Martingale System is an easy to understand gambling system based on simplicity and logic. It is so well-known that almost every player has either heard of the concept or utilised a version of the Martingale System in their play.

The question always asked of the Martingale System is, should you use it?

System martingale online casino

For as long as gambling has existed players have looked for ways to beat the games and make winning a formality. We all want to push the edge in our favour and guarantee riches and winnings.

Despite thousands of articles being written about it, the Martingale System remains a topic of gambling debate. It has never been irrefutably disproved, other than to note its inherent limitations.

The system is believed to have originated in France during the 18th century. Due to its use, the rules of the games had to evolve to push the edge definitively back towards the casinos.

In a game with only two possible outcomes, for example spinning a coin, simply double your stake each time you lose until you win. That's it! When you win, you return to your original stake and continue.

With only two possible outcomes per game, you have a 50% chance of winning each time you spin the coin. Logically, it shouldn't be too long before you guess correctly and you win. If you double your stake each time you lose, when you win you recoup your losses and go ahead by a point.

Here's a quick example. A friend challenges you to flip a coin for £1 per spin. You decide to use the Martingale System, cunningly expecting to gradually win £1 every time you win with your use of the Martingale System rendering the inevitable losses irrelevant.

It starts badly, with you guessing incorrectly 4 times in a row before winning. At £1 per point you would have four losing spins of £1, then £2, £4 and finally £8. Betting £16 on the fifth spin you win. You had lost £15 on the first four spins before winning the fifth spin for a £16 profit, putting you ahead by £1. The game continues.

Each time you use the Martingale System you may feel the odds are in your favour because you have a 50% chance of winning, so you should win half the games, right?

Well, wait a moment. That's the glass half full mentality, however, there is also the 50% chance you will lose too. Each time you play with two possible outcomes, your chances of winning, or losing, remains at 50%.

Losing runs do occur and the longer you play the more likely you will encounter a losing run. The stakes get high quickly and in the real world, casino betting limits and the size of your own bankroll limits your opportunities to play for that elusive win. The betting Gods can be cruel sometimes!

After 9 losing bets at £1 per point, the Martingale System player would need to bet £512 to win £1. Not many gamblers would be comfortable with this sort of risk for so little reward and it is worth noting that even with 9 losses, the chances of winning this bet obstinately remains at, you guessed it, (only) 50%.

Whilst you may possibly make small profits using Martingale, when you encounter a losing streak your losses can grow very quickly.

Here is an example of a ‘reverse Martingale System’ adding fun to someone’s betting:

A friend of mine has £100 each month he is happy to spend on betting. He employs strict bankroll management, allowing himself 10 bets per month at £10 stakes.

Martingale online casino system

Once the money has gone, he does not bet anymore until the next month. He wagers on sports matches where there are two outcomes at odds of 1.5 (1/2).

Each time he wins, he reinvests the £10 stake plus the profit from the previous bet into another match at the same odds. If he has six successful bets in a row at odds of 1.5, he wins roughly £115 and returns to his next £10 stake bet.

If he loses at any point in the six bets, his net loss is the profit he won plus his original £10 stake. One winning run of six bets sees him profit for the month and also gives him more bets to follow and cheer on.

The Martingale System looks good on paper, but your search for that significant edge is not over just yet. Remember the structure of Martingale is about chasing losses, which is always risky. For this reason, we wouldn’t recommend using the Martingale System as a part of your long-term betting strategy.

However, if you have the bankroll, and you’re looking for a bit of excitement, there is room for a little Martingale play in a carefully thought-out plan where you can level out the swings and give luck the chance to come out in your favour.

The Martingale system is permitted for online casinos. This system is not illegal and nor its use is banned. Therefore, it isn’t much about the legality that people are worried about. But instead, the benefits and cons that affect the winning rates. The Martingale system is known to provide better winning chances. But it also has several restrictions that make its use limited. According to this strategy, you will win every single penny that you have invested and the amount you lost during the game. But it is true only theoretically.

Now, according to the martingale betting strategy, the player will win a total of $16. So, you have gained back every single amount that you have used and lost.

Several people have the misconception that because of the increased winning amount, this scheme is illegal in casinos. But that is just a misconception, as states above. Almost all of the online casinos allow the use of this scheme. The reason is that this strategy also provides a higher house edge.

But why is it not banned? The reason is quite simple. According to pokiesonline.co.nz this method does not work in the long run. If you are playing it only for a short time, you might win the amount. But the method won't be profitable if you make higher bets and play the game in the long run.

As mentioned previously, the martingale system is commonly used for Roulette. So you will make bets on red and black. So if you think that the red has won several times, the next turn would be for black. But that's not true and thus, you might also lose it. The martingale scheme never changes the odds. So it depends entirely on your luck.

You face table limits while playing Roulette, mostly if you play at high stakes. So when you reach the table limit, you won't be able to double the previous bets. Thus, the martingale system won't be of any use to you then. Therefore, the longer run games won't provide you with enough profit.

Although you can easily find several success stories related to the martingale system, the truth is still there. You can't win thousands of dollars or pounds through this scheme. It becomes useless for Roulette when you reach the table limit. So what about the success stories then? Well, they are basically for the promotion of the betting structure and nothing more.

You can use the pros to your benefit and win a more enormous sum. Furthermore, you can also prevent getting trapped in strategy tricks.

The Martingale system works best for the Roulette table. But it is even used for Blackjack. The reason is that Blackjack does not give the max bet ceiling. Therefore, it becomes convenient for you to chase your losses. So if you have enough bankroll, you can handle the losing streaks.

There are several betting systems that are used to increase the chance of winning at roulette. The Martingale Roulette system is probably the most popular among those. The system is simple enough but often people are worried that it's some underground illegal method that can get you into trouble. This couldn't be further from the truth and worryingly most casinos are absolutely fine with it!

According to the Martingale roulette system, a player places even money bets such as high/low, red/black, and even/odd. The player will initially place a small unit bet such as $2. After that the bet increases in progression with each win.

Casino online system martingale

For example: if you place an initial bet of $2 and win then you will bet $2 again next time. In the case of a win, keep the amount of bet equal to the initial amount. However, you can change the even money bets when you lose, which of course will happen. In the Martingale roulette system if you lose then you should make your next bet double for the next round. If you lose again then double the amount again. This way keep doubling the amount of bet for successive rounds while you are losing.

The basic premise of Martingale roulette system is that you will eventually win at some point and that win is likely to cover all your previous losses. Then if you win again then double the bet. In such way you can actually make some money, whilst you play online roulette. It can get scary though as we can see from this example video where the losses add up very quickly and that stake can get very big!

The Martingale roulette system is not fool proof despite sounding so in mathematical terms. It actually has two fundamental flaws.

Firstly there is one zero pocket in European roulette and 2 zero pockets in American roulette. These zero pockets provide the house with its edge and hence it's benefit over Martingale roulette system. It means your even money bet is skewed in the houses favor. It's not a 50/50 bet which is why you'll rarely see a casino having any problem with you playing Martingale. However remember to always choose European tables as it increases your chances over these even bets.

Secondly, roulette tables have a limit for maximum amount of betting. So, if you suffer from a serial of losses than may be at some stage you cannot double you bet anymore if you reach that level. Reaching that level means you will not be able to recover your losses. The casino's are not scared about Martingale, people have been using it for decades without luck. What they are scared of is the smartest casino bet which you'll effectively be playing after a long losing streak. It's way better to go straight to this bet than mess around with Martingale.

The perfect martingale system could only be played at a casino with zero house edge (e.g no zero) and absolutely no limit on individual stakes. Combined with this you'd need a virtually unlimited bankroll and 'balls of steel' to keep going against bad streaks. Fortunately there's no casino that I'm aware of that fits into the first category – post the name in the comments if you do know one !!

Whatever system you follow for playing roulette, the house will always have advantage. You cannot beat it by any tips and tricks. However, following a certain system can help you to formulate your play and stay in a course. For Martingale Roulette system one important thing is that you should start from the lowest possible bet amount. The lowest amount will allow you more room to increase the bet when you will face a series of losses.

Make sure you pick a decent casino especially if you're playing online. There are literally only a few which are completely trustworthy. Pick the big guys, those who have a reputation – forget about ridiculous casino bonuses – they are usually locked into crazy wagering requirements.

And if you are lucky enough to hit a winning run then don't expect too much. Be content within a certain limit. Try to stop playing and save your money for another session. Try to make your bets as random as possible. This may not help you but it allows you to try your luck as much as possible.

Even with some flaws, Martingale roulette system can sometimes be a good thing to follow. Sometimes, it may not work properly. But when it does work you can expect a good amount of profit. At the end of the day, roulette is nothing but gambling. So, you must not take it for granted that following Martingale roulette system or any other system can guarantee your win every time.

There are plenty of articles out there from so-called experts telling you about various 'fool-proof' betting systems which will guarantee you a profit. Unfortunately for those casino players looking to strike it rich quick, there is no such thing as a 'can't lose' betting system which will provide you with a steady stream of income from the gaming tables.

One of the most well-known betting systems – particularly for roulette players – is the Martingale system. In this post we are going to explain the way this system is supposed to be applied at the roulette table, and also the reasons why it simply does not work.

Roulette strategy can be split into two categories: positive and negative progression. These terms refer to the way you adjust your bets based on the previous action. For example, a positive progression system requires you to increase the size of your bet following a winning spin and decrease it after a losing spin.

Casino online martingale system

In contrast, a negative progression online roulette strategy requires you to increase the size of your bet after a losing spin and decrease once you win. These are the foundations on which almost all roulette betting systems are based. We will discover later on just why those foundations are far from sound.

The roulette Martingale system uses a classic negative progression strategy. Basically, you increase the size of your bet each time you lose. In this instance, you double the size of your bet. Then, assuming that you win, you revert back to your initial stake. The logic here is that you'll make a profit of one unit (i.e., a bet equal to the size of your opening bet) when you hit a winning spin.

Bet $40 on black – Win ($30 loss cancelled out by $40 win = Plus $10 overall)

To put it another way, the Martingale system advocates that you keep doubling your bet until you win. (You won't be surprised to hear that the Reverse Martingale system advocates taking the opposite approach). Then, if and when you do win, the amount you make will cancel out the previous run of losses and leave you with a small profit. The roulette Martingale system is supposed to be used on what are referred to as 'even-money bets' e.g., red/black, odd/even or 1-18 (low)/19-36 (high).

The basis of the system is that you'll always make a one-unit profit when you win. Therefore, roulette Martingale betting is applied on bets which offer odds of close to even.

This popularisation of this betting system is credited to a Mr John H. Martingale, and the fact that he was the owner of a casino in 18th century London should raise an immediate red flag! After all, if this system really did work as advertised then Mr Martingale would soon have gone out of business.

Casino online martingale system

The basic flaw behind this system should be fairly self-evident. The Martingale system advises the player to double his or her losing bet until they hit on a win. However, the problem is that constraints apply which will eventually prevent the player from doubling up. A streak of losing bets will result in a situation where the player cannot double the previous losing bet, either because he or she does not have enough money to do so, or because of betting limits set by the casino.

A further issue to bear in mind is that the 'even money' bets that are used to illustrate the Martingale system are not 50/50 bets in reality. Many players placing a bet on red or black, or odd or even numbers on the roulette table, do not take into account the fact that the green zero pocket skews the odds in favour of the casino.

System martingale online casino

In fact the percentage chance of hitting red/black/odd/even are 48.65% on a French or European roulette table, rather than 50%. The remaining 2.7% is accounted for by the green pocket, skewing the odds in favour of the house. American roulette tables offer even less value for punters, since they feature an additional double-zero pocket, making the percentage chance of hitting a red/black or odd/even bet 47.37%.

At Casino.com we are not interested in recommending flawed betting systems to our players. We want our players to enjoy a safe and secure online roulette betting experience on our live and virtual tables, but remember that casino gaming should be treated as a form of entertainment rather than as a way to make money.
