Gambling in South Africa has been illegal since the 1600s. It became illegal in 1965 by law, followed by online gambling restrictions in 2011. The enforcement of these laws is not targeted toward the players of internet gaming. This meaning you will not get in trouble for playing at an online casino in South Africa (National Gambling Board). If you were to win larger amounts and put them into your regular bank account unreported, but even then the risks are low. Especially when you can open up an e-wallet account like Skrill or Neteller. With those you can keep your gambling funds separate from your personal finances. In short, the government regulations regarding online casino playing is enforced on the gambling operators only. This is leaving South Africans free to deposit in the best online casinos the world over without fear of prosecution. The only trepidation we would have is the idea that the South African government will force online casinos to close down in South Africa. But if it's a legitimate casino (one that we recommend), they will release your winnings.

The risks of playing at a south africa online casino are two risks that should be intuitively expected. The first risk is the same that you'll find with any ecommerce site like Amazon or eBay. Because financial transactions over the internet always come with very slight risks. Most of us who regularly make online purchases have had our information compromised. You had to have your bank refund the money and cancel the card. While our recommended casinos will use the best encryption technology to protect your information there is more you can do. Using an e-wallet or instant EFT can add a nice layer of security. Or using the immediately disposable Paysafecard that can be purchased at many local stores. The second risk is the risk that comes with gambling money in general, which we go over more in-depth in the "Addiction Prevention" section below.

Speaking of games. While most online casinos offer you hundreds of online slots and classic casino games the quality and variety differ greatly. The best casino for you depends on what games you want to play. The most popular casino games in South Africa are developed by Microgaming, NetEnt, Betsoft, Playtech and Realtime Gaming (RTG). So, if you want to play in a ZAR online casino evaluate that these games are available – and obviously, any additional ones you might want to play. The integration of different game providers goes hand in hand with more variety which often results with more fun.

With that being said, there are around a dozen land-based casinos. Including three in Durban and two in Rustenburg and Johannesburg (Gold reef city). There is also one option to each when it comes to Kempton Park, Summerstrand, Roodepoort, Brakpan, Umhlanga Rocks, and Goodwood.
