Continue to shoot. The shooter will keep rolling the dice (and you can keep betting) until they land a 7 or the point.

Follow shooter etiquette. Craps is all about throwing the dice, making fast bets and having fun. There's no need to make any fancy throws like you see on film and TV as that can slow the game down. Also, make sure to only throw with one hand and keep the dice where the dealers can see them to avoid being accused of cheating.

Be aware that you can win and lose bets when you're not the shooter. Some players think their bets only count when they're the ones rolling the dice. In craps, players are in the game if their chips are on the table.

You opt for bets with the best odds and those with a reasonable house edge.

While guessing every roll of the dice in craps is impossible, players can take several steps to improve their potential craps payout. Keep initial bets at the craps table low, and increase your intended bets with odds. That way, the house edge will take a smaller percentage of your funds throughout the game.

However, there is more to it than just tossing, with some game variations involving two, three, or even up to 5 dice being tossed to determine an outcome. These games also come with different rules and variants. Some of the most popular gambling dice games include:

A: I use a random number generator to determine the outcome of the dice roll.

Online dice games available at nearly every internet casino include the ever-popular game of craps, in which players wager on the outcome of a single roll of a pair of dice, or a series of rolls, betting against the house with as many as forty different possible bets. Dating as far back as the Crusades, the basic game of craps has been enjoyed for centuries, but has evolved recently to the upscale environment of the casino with its felt-top table with its sectioned board where players place chips to indicate their bets on each roll. In the online environment, the simulated dice are controlled by software which generates random rolls exactly replicating the results of physically rolled dice.

Add to your bets. Once a point has been set, you can then bet on the dice landing the point, landing on different numbers, or losing completely by landing on 7.

For beginners learning how to play craps, the lingo used in the game can sometimes be confusing. Most of it revolves around the different bets players can make and once you know these by heart, the terminology is easier to understand.
