Woman: I'd like a powerful one, but it also shouldn't cost too much.

Clerk: How much are you looking to spend?

Woman: I don't want to pay more than NT$10,000. Is that possible?

Clerk: Absolutely! Some of our more popular washing machines are right around that price.

Woman: Great! Can you show me a few of them and tell me their pros and cons?

Clerk: It would be my pleasure. Just step this way, please. Here, we have the cheapest one on the market. It's only NT$5,990, and if you get it today and pay in cash, the shipping is free.

Woman: That sounds like a good deal. However, does it get dirty clothes really clean?

Clerk: Yes, but it will take longer than the slightly more expensive models.

Woman: If they are still in my price range, then I'd like to see those ones.

Clerk: This one here is only NT$3,000 more, and it only takes thirty minutes to wash a lot of clothes.

Woman: That sounds perfect!

Colors affect everyone. Science has now connected them to people's desire for food.

On one hand, some colors make people want to eat more. For example, yellow makes people feel happy, and when they feel that way, they can't help but stuff food into their mouths. Also, when people want to eat healthy, they usually choose green food. That's because the color stands for fresh and natural. Another is the color orange. It makes people feel comfortable and welcome, so they feel like eating more. However, the strongest color is red. It makes people's hearts and blood move faster. This then makes them want to eat even more.

On the other hand, colors like gray, black, brown, purple, and blue keep people away from those kinds of food. When people see the first two, they don't eat the food because it has gone bad. For brown as well as black food, someone has cooked it too long and burned it, and no one wants to put that in their mouths. Purple food is hard to find in the world, and the common ones like eggplants and purple cabbages are not delicious enough for most people. Last but not least, when people see blue, they feel really calm. Soon, they want to sleep instead of eating.
