Ever since Serena was little, she has dreamed of being in and winning the People of Iron Race. Her father told her about his competing in races like that when he was in college. He always tried hard, but he was never lucky enough to win. He said it was difficult because first 1.5 kilometers were run, then 40 kilometers were swum, and finally 10 kilometers were biked. Serena could tell that her father loved the sport because he always got excited when he talked about it. Because of that, her mind was made up, and she would compete in the sport to make her father proud.

Last Saturday was Serena's first People of Iron Race, and her father was there to cheer her on. The race got started, and everything was going well for her. Then something happened. She was bumped into during a crowded part of the run and fell. She landed on her knee and hurt it badly. She was told not to move. However, she didn't want to give up when she was almost at the end, so she got up and fought through the pain. Although she didn't win, no one was prouder of her finishing than her father.
